DEMOCRATS IN DEADLOCK AT 9TH BALLOT

Long Distance View of Fight in New York

By Stephen Bolles

Howling and screaming from the storm which was tearing at the vitals of Ohio cities and leaving dead and maimed in its wake until finally, in the very midst of things, it stopped and gave a final gasping cry, the electric storm, afterword, lay silent and left nothing but a store of smoke, dust and excitement at Madison Square Garden, seldom seen or heard at any gathering of representative American citizens. From the moment the gavel of the chairman fell, to the hour when the radio gave up the ghost, there was no time for the storm along the Lake Erie shores; there was a battle between advocates of great plank in the democratic platform. Out of the sea of words and the engulfing shouts of the audience, the smashing of the gavel and the calm but insistent voice of the chairman saying "Order, order" will be long remembered. Here was a scenic view of horizons and setting suns. Of the speeches made in behalf of the League of Nations or for the committee report, one remembers only the master exordium of Newton Baker, with all the tricks of oratory. He made the League the very foundation of the democratic party and the support of the plank he had adopted, the sign and pledge of faith in democracy. To vote against it was to repudiate the dead president. These are the things one gathered over the radio as outstanding, in former Secretary of War Baker's brilliant speech.

"The man who ought to be pleading here for this cause is resting in hallowed ground," he declared in a broken voice. He then denounced the majority report as "fantastic and revolutionary."

"What is our history? Let me give it to you: Woodrow Wilson won the war. Woodrow Wilson won the peace. Woodrow Wilson died for what he won for us."

"That's our history."

"And whoever is nominated by this convention—assume we will nominate a candidate sometime—what will he say when asked for his first interview and the first question asked him is: 'Are you in favor of the League of Nations'?"

"He says 'no,' then the party has ceased to be blessed by Woodrow Wilson."

"It always 'yes,' then his questioners may answer: Well, your party was afraid to say 'no.' Thank God, it nominated a man!"

And when it was over, when Mr. Baker finished, the convention went wild. Delegates rose, grasped banners, tore away standards and amid the shouting and cheering paid a tribute to death and victory, a victory. When silence again came and the roll was called, the same delegates, with a joyous roar, repudiated the League of Nations as a political issue and voted with glee and ecstasy against Mr. Baker. They cheered his oratory but damned his subject. By a vote of 419 to 324, the League of Nations as a political issue for the democratic party. They were sorry Mr. Wilson was dead, and they put the League in the tomb with him, as the Indians of old buried the favorite weapons of the chief with the body.

And then came the Klan. It would have been better had there been fewer of what might be termed "inter-party" in that debate. They were Patterson, Fitzgerald, Bush, Mrs. Brown, who made the best speech of all, and who, from her mountain home in West Virginia, has learned the value of words. Francis Xavier Bush, of Chicago, and Braxton of Georgia, who was given an ovation because he called on the state of Georgia to vote for the naming of the Klan. It was here, when the march-

Lorain, Sandusky and Other Cities Are Devastated

By Associated Press

Cleveland.—Eighty-three persons were known to be dead in Ohio today as a result of Saturday's severe wind, rain and electric storm which swept the coast of Lake Erie from Sandusky to Lorain, wrecking a large portion of Lorain and parts of Sandusky. Although the loss of life was not as great as first believed, relief workers said today that the list of dead may grow. Several hundred persons were reported injured, several score of them seriously, and the property damage was estimated at more than $30,000,000.

14 Localities Suffer.

Following is a tabulation of the Ohio storm damage as compiled by the Associated Press:

Lorain—53 dead, several hundred severely injured and property damage estimated at more than $25,000,000.

Sandusky—Six dead, about 140 injured, with property damage estimated at more than $1,500,000.

Cleveland—Seven dead, with small property loss.

Mentor—Three dead.

Akron—One dead.

Youngstown—One dead.

Allene—No casualties but 100 persons rescued by police from flooded houses.

Elyria—Virtually no damage.

Cedar Point—68 cottages blown down; no casualties.

Vermilion—Small damage from heavy rains; no casualties.

Norwalk—Creek Valley residents made preparations to leave their homes to seek a drier residential area as weakened foundations and rains caused flooding.

Dryden returned with the police and, when McGroarty attempted to escape, he was shot. McGroarty confessed, according to the police.

The storm first struck Sandusky, doing most of its damage in the eastern part of the city, and then moved almost 25 miles to Lorain, where the greatest loss of life occurred.

At Lorain, where approximately 125 city blocks were destroyed, the greatest loss of life occurred in the State theater, in a motion picture show, which collapsed crushing many of the spectators.

Chicago—Thomas McGroarty, who kidnapped and robbed Miss Rachael Miller, a University of Wisconsin coed, and her mother, Eastern Dryden, last Friday night, was discovered in the Bridewell hospital.

He was shot three times by the police who were summoned by Dryden after McGroarty demanded more money. Dryden had only $8 and, after taking that and a $500 diamond ring from Miss Miller, the robber declared he would hold Miss Miller as a hostage until Dryden obtained more money.

Dryden returned with the police and, when McGroarty attempted to escape, he was shot. McGroarty confessed, according to the police.

BRIDGE MACHINERY STILL SUBMERGED

Albany—Though the water in the Hudson river had receded almost to former level, some of the machinery of Peter Kellie, Spring Prairie contractor, still lies submerged in the bridge pier, still submerged and will not be recovered for several days. That the bridge will be the cause of the deaths of many people is evident.

116 PIGS GIVEN TO CLUB MEMBERS

Pig Club Delivery Day Attracts Many to Janesville Fair Grounds.

A total of 116 registered pigs, sows and gilts found new owners Saturday delivery day for the Rock County pig club.

More than 200 rural residents came in for the club program at the fair grounds, the annual round-up of the largest of the seven junior clubs of the county, and it was some day. One state of workers were busy with the many tasks and another corps were in the ring wrestling with the husky young porkers.

With the delivery of the spring gilt, the mother pig, and balance of the litter becomes the entire property of the club member and a year from now the same contract procedure holds true.

Prize Program Given

Each club applicant puts in $2 for insurance and this year there was returned to the Juniors $1.50 of the insurance money, sufficient to pay for the registration of the gilt re-distributed to a boy or girl.

The division of the 116 gilts by breed was as follows: Hampshire, 11; Chester Whites, 22; Poland China, 22; Spotted Polands, 2; Berkshires, 2 and Durocs, 47—a total of 116 pigs, and a grand total of 318 pigs distributed under the club project.

During the morning, the gilts were brought in and checked and starting in the afternoon, 22 mothers and their young ones, the number steadily mounting and the new club members drew lots for the gilts. The most of the club gilts sent in to fulfill the contract were of high merit, but the club committed the coming club year will seek to have a more uniform lot to be delivered next year, there being a variation in size due to different farrowing programs.

Prize for County

The importance of sanitation in the pig lot was told by Dr. Arthur Kling, warning the club members against round worms and other birth-born swine diseases which cause great losses in the state.

Virginia, better care of the records, regular inspection, proper and success of the club project, J. A. Crain, chairman of the Rock county junior club advisory club, succeeding L. E. Jackson, sounded the true purposes of the club work.

The success of Rock county with clubs, was praised by Bert Ball, chairman, active worker in agricultural problems.

J. E. Jackson, agricultural instructor at the Janesville high school, who will attend the Wisconsin College of Agriculture his summer, had charge of Jack C. Nisbet, junior club secretary.

LONG DISTANCE VIEW OF FIGHT IN CONVENTION

ere were all round speakers who were examined by the radio experts, the band struck up "Marching Through Georgia." One could almost see the look of consternation coming over the faces of the southern delegates as that tune burst from the band. But something must have happened quickly for the band only got out the first part of this. What followed it turned to the "Star Spangled Banner." The telegraph tells us of the scenes in the Garden; that outside was a cordon of police keeping the crowds back for two blocks; and that inside there were more bluecates than delegates; that there was belief in a general riot would take place if all this was not done, and so emerging in safety was worth while. There was no riot.

This Klan debate was the most bitter in a convention ever held since the Charleston contest over Douglas-Breckinridge back in 1890 with segregation the main question necessitating of distinctly white and freedom. That record has been long since written. It is history, while the one in New York is being written. There was little time for applause Saturday night. Senator Taft was showing things through his speech was made, though we had two hours for debate. Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, made the leading address for the committee. William Patterson of Maine, had charge of the time for the resolution which named the Klan. Ed. Moore, said he would be nominated for president "here but for the resolution." He referred to Al Smith.

One of the methods by which the

Gov. Morrison, speaking for the committee report, said he had no pre-judgments and would like to see the convention. Senator Smith was nominated for president. Moore said in reply that it had been said that 242 delegates to the convention were members of the Ku Klux Klan. He also said the Imperial Wizard had been there asking for votes in the convention against the minority report. Eric of Georgia, said the party would be defeated if the Klan resolution was not adopted. Others had the same view. And then it was voted to adjourn.

New York and other newspapers are as interesting as the radio with the reports of some of the special writers and news gatherers. The Kansas City Star correspondent says Kansas has been round of "hospitality for the delegates." When he was free and some of the delegates have been drunk from the time they arrived, on Smith's Honor. Here is a paragraph also sent from the convention to the Chattanooga News: "The main vote getters of the anti-McAdoo workers have been revealed. They are the anti-McAdoo men. There is not one McAdoo delegate who has not been overwhelmed with offers of one or the other or both. The euphemistic slogan of the Tammanyites, who are stopping at nothing to defeat McAdoo is 'Hospitality, not hostility.' In actuality, the anti-McAdoo enter-tainers approach a McAdoo delegation and offer him 'We make the town wide open for you, anything you want.'

Mrs. George F. Milton, Sr., whose husband recently died, is the chief

One of the members of the resolutions committee is reported as saying: "If our own convention or leaders are supposedly responsible enough to represent the party in national convention, can we not touch-bottom fast? Right what will mean to us?"

Jared Sanders, former governor of Louisiana, said in speaking for the Klan resolution that it, however, did not make so much difference there who was nominated or whether the resolution was adopted or not. Louisiana would be democratic any way.

McAdoo Leading With Smith Long Way Behind

Delaware, however, stuck with Senator Smith.

While the ballot was on, the Missouri row had brought a physical contest outside of the hall.

Joe Shannon made about money being passed to win the Missouri delegation for McAdoo so angered Charles Hay, of St. Louis, who delivered a scolding speech for McAdoo that he went after Shannon.

"If you say that we got any money you are a d—d liar, and you know it." They said to Shannon.

First Flight in Missouri

Then according to Hay, Shannon hit him lightly on the shoulder.

Eyes witnesses, however, said that Shannon swung with his right and landed on Hay's jaw.

Several policemen who saw the trouble rushed in and separated them. Shannon denied that he struck Hay.

On the third ballot the leaders stood this way:

McAdoo 437; Smith 255 1-2.

That was a gain of 8 for McAdoo and gain of four for Smith over the second ballot.

The third ballot had removed Governor Sweet of Colorado from the field.

No Change in 5th.

The sixth ballot in the democratic national convention was no more fruitful of results than its six predecessors. It failed to change any results materially and it failed to indicate anything. The only notable development was the Louisiana delegation twenty votes in the John W. Davis column after having favored the pro-business-to-the-farm ticket in the preceding ballot.

The leaders of unaffiliated count at the close of the seventh ballot stand:

McAdoo 413 6-16; Smith 261.

This made a loss of one-half vote for McAdoo and left Smith unchanged.

Eight Ballot

The eighth ballot in the democratic national convention developed only two changes in the situation, neither of them of great weight. Michigan's thirty votes heretofore held solid for Senator Peffer, were divided among the leaders.

Train of Shingles

on Way to East

A solid trainload of 125 freight cars carrying over 25,000,000 red cedar shingles is enroute over the Chicago Northwestern railway from Seattle for Cleburne and the east. It is expected to go through Janesville some time this week.

There are sufficient shingles in the cargo to roof 2,000 average homes representing a town of over 10,000 people. It is the largest single long distance shipment of this kind ever moved by rail and is expected to end the shingle shortage which exists.

The wood will reach from New York to South and three-quarters of the nation. More than 11,750,000 square feet could be covered if laid side by side in a square.

The shingles are made from the giant trees of the Pacific coast.

Religious Issues and the Democratic Party.

Nothing could be worse for a free people than a political campaign having to do with government and governmental principles, in which a religious factor appears. The great majority of the first inhabitants of America came here to get away from a persecution based on their refusal to accept certain religious principles, laid down by secular laws which were as much a part of the function of government as other proscriptions and inhibitions in reference to purely civil relations.

We wrote these principles into the Declaration of Independence and again into the constitution of the United States and again into the constitutions of all the states of the union, repeating and reiterating that principle of the right of freedom in religious worship until there has never been any question as to its being as much a part of the foundation of this republic as is the right to vote—even more so, for there are no necessary provisions or limitations about the right in religious freedom.

There has been more or less discussion from time to time of religious matters. This very discussion, the attitude of organized churches and whether they have been concerned with politics or not as such organizations, has instigated some of the feeling which, however much we may attempt to minimize it, has taken a deep hold on a part of the public, and made it possible for clamorous persons, partly for commercial gain, and partly for notoriety, to, in turn, organize with the published purpose of countering such political attitude, no matter how much that may have been exaggerated.

The republican party met the clamorous demand for a plank against the Ku Klux Klan with a statement reiterating the tenets of faith on which this nation is founded in right and righteousness. They realized the evanescent character of disturbing organizations. They remembered the anti-Masonic campaign eight decades ago.

They remembered the Know Nothing movement and its death. They remembered the dozen or more sporadic attempts to do the same thing, in one way or another and refused to give the Klan that stamp of individuality and importance which would be its greatest aid. The republican party was founded on the very corner stones of liberty, rose to power on that faith and platform, and continued so because it was not carried away by accepting something whose only claim to recognition was because it was new, nor yet clinging to something else just because it was old.

These military governors or "tuchuns," as they are called, collect the taxes. If it suits their pleasure to be honest, they remember the constitution and forward the regular percentage of revenues to the Peking treasury, but few of them appear to take this obligation seriously. Mandates coming from the president of the republic are ignored, if found inconvenient. In fact, the government at Peking today controls an area not more than 30 miles square. The self-appointed competitive government at Canton has an equally limited control. The rest of the country is distributed among the Tuchuns, who accept authority from none but themselves.

With so many large, independent military forces scattered throughout the country, it naturally follows that there is much fighting. Wars among rival Tuchuns are frequent occurrences, while civilians are constantly challenging the governorship; for of course, it is a prize to which all aspire. Always the troops of the victorious Tuchun loot the villages and levy even heavier taxes upon the inhabitants. It is the defeated Tuchun, however, who is the chief bane of foreigners. If he does not manage to escape with sufficient funds from the treasury of his province to retire in luxury, there is only one course open to him. He becomes a bandit, and an outlaw, together with his troops. Gone is his provincial prestige; his control of the taxes, his enormous power over the civilians. Thereafter, his one aim in life is to regain his lost position, by hook or crook.

This is where the foreigners prove useful. By kidnapping a few important citizens of foreign nations, the bandit chief can usually succeed in attracting the attention of the government at Peking. The agents of the foreign nations give the government no peace until it considers the conditions upon which he has agreed to return their nationals. A complete pardon and reinstatement with full rank and pay, both for himself and his followers, are demanded. The government at Peking may wish to refuse. If the victim is Chinese, it probably would refuse. But with the lives of foreigners at stake, as well as the loans of foreigners, it is forced to meet the bandit's demands.

In addition to this type of kidnapping bandit, who acts with political motives, China is also filled with other varieties of bandits, most of whom are after money alone. These prey upon their own race as well as upon foreigners. Great alarm was recently spread throughout one province by the rise of a band of women bandits who kidnapped wealthy Chinese men and dragged them beaten and half-starved until they agreed either to supply the necessary ransom, through friends, or to marry one of the outlaw damsels.

The democratic convention, raising the question of religion for the first time and with a bitterness which has heretofore been unknown and perhaps thought impossible, has only added by its action in making more wide the separation and deeper the conflict entirely outside the law and the constitution. Not so much has this come about by the action of the convention in adopting a platform plank by a narrow margin of 4 votes but by the acrimonious debate which preceded it widening the breach in churches and between persons. Never before has church been divided in a national convention.

The democratic convention settled nothing at all. It has only added fuel to the fire and made for future disturbances along the same lines. The question at issue was a matter of words, not principles. There can be no other than the republican way on the question of principle unless the democratic party repudiates the constitution entirely.

It again shows that in matters of great moment like this having to do with the very life and future of the republic the republican party thinks clearly and acts patriotically and calmly.

Uncle Hiram Hawversick says that while the senate is discussing, Vice-president Davis will only be cussin' the senate.

The Repudiation of Mr. Wilson

These are not our words but those of Newton C. Baker, former secretary of war, who in the most impassioned plea before the democratic national convention, summoned the name and presence of the dead leader of the democracy of the nation, to add in placing a plank for the acceptance of the League of Nations in the democratic platform. Men say things under such circumstances that in their heat come back to worry and punish them. Mr. Baker charged that the democratic party in refusing to say plainly that it was for accepting the league membership of America, was denying and repudiating its greatest leader and deserved defeat.

But in spite of the power of oratory, in spite of the pressure brought to bear by Baker, the convention with an almost two to one vote refused to commit itself to joining the league of nations and accepted the committee plank which is as useless and unworkable as it would be to conjure.

This action of the convention by its overwhelm-

BUSY CHINESE BANDITS

BY FREDERIC J. HASICK.

Washington.—The continued kidnapping of Americans and other foreigners by Chinese bandits is fast developing into a serious international problem. Since the dramatic episode of last fall when a large group of foreigners was taken off a luxurious express train and driven into the mountain lair of Ilonan bandits, who demanded exorbitant reward for their return, such occurrences have been alarmingly frequent. Missionaries and business men, theoretically safe in China under the protection of foreign flags, are finding themselves practically at the mercy of an ever-growing population of outlaws.

Within the past month, word has been received of at least four attacks upon American citizens, two of which ended tragically. The American manager of a British firm in Peking was recently killed by river pirates while supervising the loading of a steamer on the Yangtze River. And an American missionary was killed by the Chinese police declared to be "a stray bullet."

About the same time an American gunboat was dispatched from Peking to Wuchow to trace two Americans, Canadian and an Australian, who were captured by bandits while on their way in a motor boat to rescue missionaries whose lives were imperiled. The bandits released the Canadian and one American in order that they might secure from their friends the ransom demanded. The other American managed to escape. That left only the Australian in the hands of the kidnappers. The last news from Peking observed that his position was distinctly not to be envied. Of the escaped American no word has been received.

With the exception of a slight preference for Americans and Britishers, the bandits appear to exhibit little partiality in choosing their victims. Norwegians, Italians, Frenchmen, Russians and Japanese have all fallen, at one time or another, to the widespread killing net. Consequently, diplomatic circles everywhere are beginning to link with hints of China's need of another lesson in foreign force such as the Boxer affair.

Yet it is admitted that the kidnapping activities of the bandits are directed not primarily against foreign governments but against the Chinese state. Hatred of foreigners is not the ruling motive in most instances, but common personal gain. By holding captive the citizens of other nations, the bandits can embarrass their own government, thus forcing it to reward them with the favor they desire. Generally, it is pardon and reinstatement in the national army that is requested, as most of the bandits are ex-soldiers. Sometimes it is merely money. They know that the Chinese authorities at Peking are too weak to deal out punishment; they know that other nations dare not—set—interfere. The advantages are all in favor of the bandit profession.

Although banditry has always existed to a large extent in the mountain districts of China—and especially in Manchuria, where the Hungshutze or "Red Beards" are a recognized robber clan—it's enormous prevalence today is a result of the country's turbulent political conditions. Until the downfall of the Manchus and the establishment of the Chinese Republic, eleven years ago, the Chinese were, on the whole, a remarkably law-abiding people. They had known plenty of war and conquest in the past, but it had left them with little taste for military strife or glory. Their honor was for the scholar, the merchant, the statesman. Learning alone had power. Now, all this is changed. China today is completely in the hands of predatory, military cliques, who rule their territories with modern force. The tyranny of ancestors that once held the Chinese in deep tranquility has been superseded by the tyranny of machine guns, which keeps them in a state of perpetual agitation.

When the Chinese Republic first set up its government in Peking under the presidency of Yuan Shih Kai, it made one fatal error. It placed the various eighteen provinces of China under military governors, with large armed forces. As a result, China was divided into a series of independent, treacherous republics, each all-powerful in itself and paying scarcely any heed to the central government at Peking.

These military governors or "tuchuns," as they are called, collect the taxes. If it suits their pleasure to be honest, they remember the constitution and forward the regular percentage of revenues to the Peking treasury, but few of them appear to take this obligation seriously. The tuchun will court and marry.

Today, the tuchun, on this day probably will be exceedingly bright and gay. These subjects of China usually die rapidly in business and professional life. They are naturally endowed with determination and are usually intuitive.

And soon we'll celebrate with toy pistols and tobacco antitoxin.

JUST FOLKS

BY EDGAR A. GUEST.

LILACS IN THE ROOMING HOUSE DISTRICT Down where the houses have faded and commerce has come in to stay. And the last of the home-loving people have long ago journeyed away. As it is in defiance of traffic, by a dwelling of somnolent rooms.

In the dust and the noise of the city a lovely old lilac tree blooms.

None remembers the lady who loved it and planted it there by the door,

When that house was a home for her children in an age to be known never more;

None remembers the garden of roses that bloomed there days.

All have fled from that rooming-house district and only the lilac tree stays.

The house has grown ugly and bitter. It is seldom love smiles in the hall.

The keeper now hawters for dollars the welcome she gives those who call;

The old fashioned charm has long vanished, for commerce has scourged it away,

But with all its old-fashioned splendor that lilac tree blossoms today.

What memories cluster around it, profuse as the blossoms on each branch!

The last touch of beauty which lingers where commerce is trafficking now!

The men and the women who loved it to quiet places have gone,

But shut in by the merciless city that lilac tree still blossoms on.

MISTRESS WILDING:

A ROMANCE, BY RAFAEL SABATINI.

(Author of "Scarborough", "Captain Blood", "Fortune's Fool", etc.)
and the voice was the voice of Anthony Wilding.
SYNOPSIS.
Young Richard Westmarche, by nature cowardly, but led by the wine and avarice, becomes richly appointed board dashes a cup of coffee into the face of Anthony Wilding, which that gentleman is about to drink. Wilding thinks a cup to Ruth Westmarche, now Wilding loves Ruth and calculates for that reason he may insult Wilding in impunity. But Ruth, unknown to Wilding's knowledge, has means to make him suffer. She is a great favorite with her brother, a great favorite with Ruth. Wilding and Richard are engaged in a duel on the morrow. That night Ruth comes to see him, sick in bedwater a sober and unashamed man, she Rowland Blake is the sutor Richard's favors, for he has been a good boy, like that when Ruth invites him a quarter of her possessions will be made over to Richard, who is a spendthrift and a scoundrel. But Ruth doesn't care for Sir Rowland, she loves the other cousin, Diana Horton, is deeply in love with him. The morning of the wedding Ruth appears early at the Westmarche home, and asks for Richard. He accredits Ruth and Diana with Richard's trouble. Diana persuades Ruth to call on Wilding, and Ruth goes to him, in which her brother would certainly be killed. Wilding says he will spare Richard's life and honor if she will marry him.

Trenchard turned quickly to Ruth, behind her Diana sat—an attendant had fetched a chair for her in fear and wonder at what she saw and heard, her eyes ever and more straining to Sir Rowland's back, which was toward her.

"This is the moment, said he, for the possession of which you have accounted in so many pictures, a number, was intended and addressed to Mr. Wilding, you say. And you are prepared to swear it?"

Ruth turned indignantly to the Beach. Must I answer this man's question? she demanded.

"I think, perhaps, it were best you did," said the Duke, still showing all his deference.

She turned to Trenchard, her head high, her eyes full upon his wrinkled cynical face. "I swear, then..." she began, but he—summate actor that he was and versed in tricks that impress an audience—interrupted her, raising his hands in yellow hunting gloves.

"Nay, nay," said he, "I could not have perjury proved against you. I do not ask you to swear, it will be sufficient if you pronounce yourself prepared to swear."

She pouted her lip a little, her expression indicating her contempt of him. "And in no fear of perjury, my lord," she answered coolly.

"And I swear that the letter in question was addressed to Mr. Wilding."

"As you will," said Trenchard, and was careful not to ask her how she came by her knowledge. "The letter, no doubt, was in an outer wrapper, on which there would be a superscription—the name of the person to whom the letter was addressed." The Duke acquiesced, and Trenchard, who saw the drift of the question, nodded gravely.

"No doubt," said Ruth.

"Now you will acknowledge, I am sure, madam, that such a wrapper must be a document of the greatest importance, as important indeed, as the letter itself, since we could depend upon it finally to prove the point on which we differ. You will admit so much, I think?"

"Why, yes," she answered, but her voice faltered a little, and her stance was not quite so fearless. She was at last the pit behind her for hours. He leaned forward, smiling quizzically, and looked impressively, but not with the bolt that was waiting to strike him.

"Her eyes fell away from his face, turned to Albermarle, who sat cowering again, and from him they flickered restlessly to Phelps and Lattrell, and lastly, to Richard, who, very white and with set teeth, paid listening to the working of the mind of the story she had told.

"I do not know," she faltered at last.

"Ah!" said Trenchard, drawing a deep breath. He turned to the torch. "Next I suggest what we need—the urgent need—for suppressing that wrapper?" quoted he. "Next I say what name was inscribed upon it? I think not, your Grace's keen insight, and ours, gentlemen, will determine whether we are right."

SLIMMING.

One darning needle, one dressing-gown, two stockings, and shoes, and they should always be well coated with this if they are to be stored for any length of time. When in constant use, rub the shoes with vaseline once a week, leave them for a day, then rub it off thoroughly. Should they get wet in wet weather, rub off the mud with a cloth, then rub the shoe. If it is difficult to scratch the very soft cloth, rub rawing patent leather. A gloss is obtained by rubbing a soft cloth on white leather, and brightly polishing the shoes with it.

After washing and drying wooden handles, hang them on a line in the open air, and beat them with a carpet-beater. This raises the fluff, and the handles will look almost as good as new.

SUMMER CHORES.

We cannot live without eating in the warm summer weather any more than we can in the winter, we can simplify our meals so that the task is lighter both for the cook and our digestive apparatus. Many women do their baking in the sunroom, or sun parlor, in the basement, others who work in the kitchen, or sunroom, on top of all, slothfully. Use plenty of milk, fruit and fresh vegetables, and you will get through the heat with a minimum of discomfort. If your family likes hot food, and the need of some is usually felt, make some cold dish in the casserole with some berries or fruit, a vegetable dish, or a salad, and a cold milk pudding to have a substantial and appetizing meal.

Sir Rowland now stood forward, addressing Albermarle. "Will Your Grace permit me to offer my explanation of this?"

Albermarle banged the table. His fingers were at an end, since he came to now believe—as Trenchard had earlier suggested—that he had been played upon by Ruth.

"For many months I have lived already, sir," he announced, in his sudden access of choler he forgot his colleagues altogether. The prisoners are committed for trial," said he harshly, and Trenchard breathed freely at last. But the Duke, who had caught his breath again for a physician who was heard without demanding to see His Grace of Albermarle at once,

"I do not know," she faltered at last.

"Ah!" said Trenchard, drawing a deep breath. He turned to the torch. "Next I suggest what we need—the urgent need—for suppressing that wrapper?" quoted he. "Next I say what name was inscribed upon it? I think not, your Grace's keen insight, and ours, gentlemen, will determine whether we are right."

It was in the days when Germany was not empire and fell hard, careful what they said, lest they be accused of treason. A carpenter says Israel Zangwill, was in a crowd waiting to see the emperor pass. The men had an excellent position, but he was uneasy because he had promised to meet a concealed young brother-in-law, and the brother-in-law had not come.

"Will the jackanapes never come?" cried the carpenter angrily.

A policeman promptly arrested him.

"But I was speaking of my brother-in-law!" gasped the carpenter, terrified.

"You meant 'Jackanapes': you must have meant 'the emperor,'" replied the policeman and marched the man off.

The young man, dancing with the girl to whom he had just been introduced, remarked with the best of intentions, but rather unfortunately: "That's the new waltz. My sister was saying about it. I think it's pretty bad, except she danced it with somebody rather nice."

About yourself and these new fashions? With your arms stand straight and improbable. Most people have nice arms, only the very fat, or the very fat need bother a great deal about their arms. But what about your elbows? Few people have really pretty elbows.

If you haven't, give them an oil bath every night. No matter how old you are, no matter how thin you are, you can have pretty elbows by a rubbing them vigorously with bath water and soap, and then rubbing them well with lard, cream, butter (warmed), skin food (Giltate is an oil cream made from vegetable oils), olive or almond oil. This treatment should be done at night when possible, and in the morning, the elbows dipped or rinsed in cold water.

But the first horse thief got off. The horse slipped and he fell into the water and swam downstream to safety.

When the committee came to deal with the second horse thief he said anxiously, as they knotted the rope round his neck: "For Pete's sake, gents, make sure of the noose this time. I can't swim."

THE KLAN PLANK ADOPTED BY DEMS. BY 1 VOTE MARGIN

New York—This is the plank over which the battle was fought in the democratic convention. It is the plank reported by the committee and accepted by one vote.

"FREEDOM OF RELIGION," "FREEDOM OF SPEECH," "FREEDOM OF PRESS."

The democratic party reaffirms its adherence and devotion to those cardinal principles contained in the constitution and the sentiments on which our government rests. We shall make no laws respecting the establishment of religion, prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances, that the church and the state shall be, and remain, separate, and that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office of public trust under the United States.

These principles we pledge ourselves to defend and maintain. We insist that there be no obedience to the orderly processes of the law and declare and condemn any effort to arouse religious or racial dissension."

The substitute added that the convention condemned the Ku Klux Klan. On this after a battle lasting until 2 o'clock Sunday morning the vote was 542 and 320 against adoption of a resolution of one vote against the Klan substitute. But this morning a recapitulation of the vote showed that the correct official report was 540-15-109 against the substitute and 641-85-100 for the margin before being read and 20-100 in favor of the plank printed above. There was some talk of reconsideration of the vote this morning, but Brennan put a stop to that. The convention adjourned at 2 a. m. Sunday until Monday at 9:30 a. m.

LIBRARY GOES ON SUMMER SCHEDULE

NO FINES ON PAST DUE BOOKS THIS WEEK

Public libraries, including lending and merchant return library books left by customers in their stores during this week, will all fines on overdue books are being discontinued. Patrons of stores often leave books on store counters by mistake. It is stated.

They should be returned directly to the library building this week. This is the only time when fines are being taken off, and all overdue books not returned by Saturday will again be subject to the usual rates.
